[Scientific American.] The United States Navy annually takes into its service a large number of apprentice boys, who are sent all over the world and taught to be thorough sailors. It has been the policy of the the "blue lacket," upon the principle that the more intelligent a man is, the better sailor he is likely to become. There are no lack of candidates for these positions. Hundreds of boys apply, but many are rejected because they cannot pass the physical examination. Corpse, who is in charge of the Wash ington Navy Yard barracks, is the authority for the statement that one fifth of all the boys examined are rejected on account of heart disease. His first question to a boy who desires to enlist is: "Do you smoke?" The invariable response 18, "No, sir," fingers at once shows the truth. It should be warning to parents that the deadly cigarette is sure to bring about incalculable injury to the young. A law passed restricting its use to the dudes would not perhaps, bring popular disfavor, because it might reduce the number of these objects about our streets, but boys indulging in the cigarette ought to be treated to liberal doses of "rod in pick-

The necessary authority for his extradition was received two days later. On May 31, detectives left this country to bring the prisoner back. He was landed in due time, and is now awaiting his trial on the charge of murdering Preller.

Unusual public interest has been man ifested in the facts briefly summarized in the preceeding paragraph. While many hold that the theory of the police is a correct one, it is held by others that Preller is yet alive, and that the body found in the trunk was that of a "stiff" which Maxwell had bought. It seems that the accused man had been a medical student, and bad been trying to buy a corpse before the time of the ghastly discovery at the hotel. Moreover, every now and then reports are given to the press that Preller has been seen alive since the discovery of surgeons say cigarette smoking by boys his alleged remains. Maxwell, who is oroduces heart disease, and that in nine-decribed as a vain and talkative person, maintains his usual flow of good spirits, and apparently apprehends no serious trouble from the accusation hanging over his head. Possibly the opinion This is a remarkable statement, coming, that he will baffle the prosecution by proving Preller to be still alive, is better grounded than now appears. Whether or not, in case Prelier shall not turn up, the prosecution will be able to secure the conviction of Maxwell, is a problem exercising the public mind very generally, and developments are eager-ly awaited.
